How to Play

To prepare for this game, it is helpful to know how many participants you will have. You will need to create a list of condiments, with one condiment for each person participating. Each person will eat a piece of toast with one of the condiments on the list. Some of the condiments should be normal things that you'd want to put on toast (e.g. butter, jelly, cream cheese). Some of it should be mid-tier, like you wouldn't hate it, but you definitely wouldn't look forward to it (e.g. mustard, mayonnaise, sriracha), and some of it should be gross, the thought of having to potentially eat this condiment on toast is terrifying (e.g. anchovies, oysters). Once you've got the list, put all of these condiments into a numbered list in a random order.

Next you'll need a bunch of ping pong balls, one per condiment. On each ball, write a different number. Each ping pong ball will correspond to one of the condiments, but the group will have no idea which one.

Have the group sit in a circle of chairs with a toaster placed in the middle. Take one of the ping pong balls at random, and place a slice of bread into the toaster. As the bread begins to toast, start to pass the ping pong ball around the circle, similar to hot potato. When the toast pops, whoever is holding the ping pong ball will have to eat the toast along with whatever condiment corresponds to the number that is on the ping pong ball in their hands.

Reveal the condiment that the fates have chosen for this person, and present it to them. They must eat all of the toast and move their chair out of the circle. Put another piece of bread in the toaster and start again. Keep the rounds going until every person has eaten their slice of toast.

Tips!

Here are some ideas for condiments to use!

Good: butter, cream cheese, maraschino cherries, crushed cookies, chocolate syrup, jelly

Medium: ketchup, mustard, mayonnaise, salsa, relish, gravy, applesauce, yogurt, cranberry sauce, olives

Bad: baby food, anchovies, sardines, soy sauce, vinegar, pickle juice, canned meat
