Summary

- ★ Team captains wear an oversized t-shirt and oversized sweatpants
- ★ Teams inflate balloons and stuff them inside their team captain's outfit
- ★ Players are blindfolded, so only the captain can see and direct their team
- ★ The team with the most balloons stuffed inside of their oversized outfit when time runs out wins!

How to Play

You'll need one huge t shirt or sweatshirt and one huge pair of sweatpants per team. Divide your group into teams of roughly 4 to 6 people each, and spread uninflated balloons all around the floor of your room.

One person on each team will wear the oversized clothes, and the rest of the team's job is to stuff that person's outfit with as many inflated balloons as possible. The trick is that everyone on the team, except for the people in the oversized clothes, will be blindfolded, so they'll need to be led by their captain.

Now you might be thinking, what's to stop someone from barely putting any air in a balloon and trying to get credit for it? Well that's a great question! Before the game starts, take one of the balloons and fill it with air, then show that balloon to the teams. Tell them that any balloon that is smaller than the one you are holding will not count towards their final score. You probably won't need to check the balloons when scoring, because once you've told them this they typically fill the balloons up extra large just to be safe.

You can set a time limit, or play until all of the balloons are inflated, but normally I play until one of the teams reaches a point where they just can't fit any more balloons into their captain's outfit. Count how many balloons each team managed to stuff into their captain's oversized clothing, and the stuffiest captain's team wins.
